THINKING OUT LOUD

By H. M. L.

It is to be expected the biggest war ever waged on this planet, when ended, would leave a number of sore spots scattered over the world's body. There is the ugly seven year itch in China, the hives that keep Palestine agitated, the carbuncle in the Dutch East Indies, and red fringe of ecezema, highly inflamed that creeps out from the borders of Russia.

Then there is the tumorous growth inside Spain that badly needs excising, and in due time perhaps we shall witness an operation on that ancient and decrepit political organism. Uneasy rest the heads of all fascist or nazi protagonists in this modern time. Sooner or later, Franco the murderous dictator must go. If Mussolini deserved his ignominious end, Franco deserves double the punishment, if it were possible.

While as an American accustomed to the democratic way of life, we dislike the attitude of parental authority that the allies assume, at times toward small and ambitious countries, such as Korea, which is economically destitute, we must compromise with the general principle of individual freedom and sovereignty for the small and very weak states, and put them through a course in democracy tempered and adapted to their capacity and needs.

In fact that is exactly what Uncle Sam has done in the case of the Philippines, their tutelage lasted more than 40 years, as against the five years now proposed for Korea. Quite naturally the Korean leaders are protesting. What the Koreans fear is that the five years may stretch into a longer term. However, the Koreans should consider that the allies have arrived at a covenant opening and publicity expressed, and five years is a small matter historically speeaking, if they emerge free at the end of it.

From this distance it looks as if the cure for sharp unrest in the Dutch Indies is to give the natives a greater share in their own government. We do not believe that they are as ready for self government as are the Filipinos, because the Dutch rulers, apparently, have never contemplated until very recently making the Indonesians a self governing people. We suspect that the Dutch are now more propitiatory because the war has very definitely changed the current of world opinion in such matters.

As for the problem that sprawling Russia presents to the rest of the world, we are hopeful that time will mend some of its unilateral excesses. Russia, we must remember, has emerged from a war in which its future hung in the balance, as much certainly as that of Britain. The reaction of the Russian people and Russian leadership, is to prevent by every means possible, the possibility of a recurrence of such a disaster and national hazard. For there was a time, when Stalingrad seem fated to fall, that Russia seemed on the brink of tremendous defeat, slavery for its people and eventual partition by the Germans.

Supposing, just supposing, that Canada or Mexico had been able to stage such an invasion and threat of dissolution against the United States. What would we have done when we finally defeated the invaders? We would have trusted very little any international body set up to prevent wars in the future: In short, we think our action after such an experience as Russia had, would, under the same conditions, be very much like hers.

As the United Nations gets going, strikes its international gait, so to speak, we think many of the ills now afflicting this sad old world will disappear. There will be minor difficulties, minor as compared with what we have now, but, we think there will be established certain principles applicable to most of the problems that now confont the peace loving nations. We Americans shall have our influence in the establishment those principles of member rights and international justice, affecting the liberties of all peoples. Russia and Great Britain will exert their influence. The sum total will not be the attainment of its ideals by any one nation but a synthetic of them all.

Half the proceeds of the March of Dimes will remain in the county for fighting infantile paralysis locally. The other half goes to the National Foundation. It is announced that Nevada County during the year has had four cases of infantile paralysis and medical expenses of these unfortunates have been largely met through the accumulated local fund.

HAYNES ADMITS CONVICTIONS FOR MANY FELONIES

William Haynes whose trial on charges of burglarizing Alpha Stores Ltd. last June began yesterday, when placed on the stand in his own behalf admitted under District Attorney H. Ward Shelon's questioning that he had been convicted of five felonies, prior to his arrest on the present charges.

Haynes who was returned from San Quentin for the trial, is serving a sentence for burglary committed two years ago in Alpha Stores, to which he then pleaded guilty. He was not sentenced at that time, but returned to the Nevada penetentiary at Carson City for violating his parole terms.

The revolver, which was found in Haynes car in Corvallis, Ore., in August and for which he served a short term in jail on conviction of carrying a concealed weapon, was identified in the trial yesterday by its serial number, as having been taken from Alpha Stores here. Ray Murchie, store manager, identified it.

Haynes convictions according to his own testimony were for stealing cars and for other burglaries. Vernon Stoll, former district attorney, is defending Haynes. The trial it is expected will be concluded today.

News and Novelty Shop Changes Hands Feb. 1

The new owners state that they will move their shop from its present location on lower Broad Street to the store room formerly occupied by the Dew Drop Inn, 314 Broad Street. Change in ownership takes place February 1st.

GENERAL MOTORS AND GREEN AGREE ON ONE THING

By Ralph H. Taylor

It appears from this corner that perhaps the most significant statement in the flood of comment on President Truman's "report to the nation" speech was that of William Green, AFL chieftain.

While he heartily endorsed most of Truman's program—full employment legislation, raised wage floors, extended unemployment compensation, federal housing, etc.—this labor leader reiterated his opposition to the president's insistence on fact finding machinery to handle strikes or threatened strikes.

Of Statutory fact finding boards, armed with subpoena powers and backed up by 30 day "cooling off" periods before strikes could occur, Bill Green complained that the plan "would make wage fixing a permanent government policy" and "would subject labor and management to control by government boards."

On that particulary issue Green takes the side of General Motors. The company in a public statement reasons for withdrawal from fact-finding committee hearings in protest against the opening of its books to committee inspection declared:

"The company refuses to subscribe to what it believes will ultimately become through the process of evolution the death of the American system of competitive enterprise. It will not participate voluntarily in what stands out crystal clear at the end of the road—a regimented economy. If this is what the American people want they must make that choice through their accredited representatives in congress. General Motors declines for itself to take such a great responsibility."

The significance in Green's stand on the side of industry in this matter is indication that he may be perceiving a gleam of light on a "process of evolution" which labor itself as an organized class of citizens has blindly espoused for years.

This process began in 1933 as a result of the depression. It has continued to this day. It began with government taking over the responsibilities of individuals and also taking over—gradually and insidiously—their independence of action in many little ways many little successive steps.

The government has consistently favored organized labor, fostering its growth to the tremendous power it now wields. Government regulated business in favor of labor—compelled collective bargaining; put federal strength in great measure behind the principle of the closed shop.

What labor did not realize in welcoming government as an all powerful ally, is that it is the nature of bureaucracy once empowered to regulate the lives of institutions and individuals, to feed on that power to extend it—and never to set a line at which to stop.

Government which dictates to the business must also inevitably in time dictate to labor—for labor is part, parcel of the fabric of industry. It is so in agriculture, long ridden with directives and controls. It is so in everything that men and women do to make a living.

Green sensing a threat to labor's independence suddenly cries out against it. He might have seen it coming years ago.

What he doesn't see apparently, since he praises most of the rule and regulate legislation sought by the administration, is that the same process of evolution includes all such legislation—no matter how desirable the objectives may appear and some of them may actually be.

Housing for instance. Certainly there is a crying national need for a vast and speedly building program. Farmers are feeling the pinch of this need perhaps more than any other group of Americans.

But the administration proposed legislation to meet that need would empoyer the government to say to all building industries:

"You build those houses—but do the job in accord with all decrees of government agencies on prices, materials allotments, etc. If you can't do the job our way without losing money government will take over the job."

Should government provide the housing all industry and all labor would pay for the socialistic program in taxes on private industrial profits and wages. And with government as the boss labor in the building trades would be in the predicament Green views with such alarm.

Every control and every industry acquired by government is a control and an idustry lost by the people. It is a good sign for the future of America when a labor leader of Green's prominence recognizes at least one of the major danger signals.

LAPHAM URGES RURAL URBAN COOPERATION

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 24 — All San Franciscans should recognize the interdependence of their city and the communities of the surrounding country, Mayor Roger D. Lapham declared in his annual message to the board of supervisors.

Reporting on the work of the municipal regional service committee which he said has played a good role the mayor said:

"This is the seventh year of the municipal regional service committee operation and it has been playing a good role in continuing to foster friendly relationships between San Francisco and her neighboring cities and counties in central and northern California.

"I personally have had occasion to be in contact with representatives of central and northern California communities—in their home cities and towns as well as in San Francisco—and I believe that we should continue to do all we can not only to make friends of but to be friends with our sister cities and counties of the state.

"San Francisco can no more progress without their aid and assistance than they can prosper without our help. Every citizen should recognize this himself when the opportunity arises to contact residents of other sections.

"The regional service committee has cooperated in this work with the many agricultural, industrial and regional development organizations of our state. It is constantly alert of evidences of friction in public relations and has enabled small sores to be healed rapidly, on many occasions before they have become serious infections."

Paying tribute to the late Harold J. Boyd city controller and first chairman of the regional service committee Lapham said:

"Boyd devoted considerable time to furthering the city's relationship with other communities of northern California and of the west in general."

Grass Valley Community House For Social Use Only

The Grass Valley City Council at its meeting Tuesday night reaffirmed the rule under which the community house in Memorial Park was built and dedicated, namely, that it shall be for social and recreational purposes and not for political or religious gatherings.

The rule was reaffirmed by the council due to the increasing pressure exerted by groups which desire to use it for other than the purposes for which it was built. Park Manager Joseph Hocking was instructed to adhere to the rule.

Chief of Police Ben Jenkins urged that a curfew ordinance be enacted in conjunction with one now being considered by the county board of supervisors and in accord with an ordinance already in effect in Nevada City. The chief submitted a model ordinance which has been adopted by many communities in California.

Pursuant to suggestions made by Dr. E. M. Roesner, city health officer, the council decided to place the city pound in better condition. Instead of a wooden fence the pound area will be surrounded by a steel wire fence.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Sampson of 321 Pleasant Street, Grass Valley on Sunday, January 20th celebrated their half century of married life with a big reception at their home to relatives, friends, children and grandchildren. This was followed by a family reunion dinner Monday.

Mrs. Sheldon New Head Of High School P. T. A.

Mrs. H. Ward Sheldon wife of the district attorney, has been elected president of the Nevada City High School Parent Teachers Association. Other officers chosen are Miss Evelyn Corr, faculty member, vice president; Mrs. D. J. Underwood, secretary and Mrs. Walter Hawkins, treasurer.

The association plans to establish a cafeteria at the high school some time this year. Edward Frantz, vice principal is now endeavoring to obtain kitchen utensils and trays from the surplus commodities released by the army. The kitchen back of the stage in the auditorium will be used during the early days of the project. It is believed that with student help the enterprise can be initiated with comparatively small expense.

PEACE DISTURBERS FINED

Louis F. Dudley 40 and Howard Misser 28, stockmen of North San Juan paid $15 each for fist fighting in the New Deal Cafe Monday evening. Justice of the Peace Charles Morehouse gave them the alternative of 30 days in jail.

When arrested for disturbing the peace both men violently objected to riding to the police station in the patrol car. Bystanders were called in to give a helping han, according to the police.

S. F. MODENIZES TRANSPORTATION

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 24—Ten cents a ride, three rides for 25c—that will be the new street car fare in San Francisco in the near future. An OPA protest that the rate increase will impair the government's cost of living program delayed starting of the new fares on January 20 as planned.

The proposed raise from 7c is earmarked to pay for new cars and busses now on order and also to pay off the balance of the purchase price on the Market street railway stock probably by the end of 1946.

The public utilities commission has now officially adopted the post war transit plan for the municipal railway proposed by Leonard V. Newton consulting engineer which involves an expenditure of $23,000,000 over a five year period and will ultimately mean complete modernization of the overcrowded and antiquated San Francisco street car system.

In other phases of the rehabilitation a move is on to buy out the California street cable railroad thus effecting municipal ownership of all street cars in the city. With the easing of the manpower shortage platform workers are being discharged for absenteeism, tardiness, inefficiency or discourtesy. Appropriations for track work have been doubled and 175,000 has been transferred from other city departments for the payment of injury and proposed claims.

The question of who gets the $600 000 collected in extra pennies when the Market street railway was opposing a fare cut from 7 to 6c—the former company the city or the state—has gone for decision to the state supreme court. Of the total collected only $13.00 was claimed by passengers who preserved receipts.

County Fair Set For August 16, 17, 18

Nevada County will resume its annual 17th District fairs, interrupted by the war on August 16, 17 and 18, it is announced.

Watt Park according to Loyle Freeman, secretary, will be largely extended from its present area of 15 acres by the acquisition of 55 acres chiefly from the Alderman and Pascoe ranches, adjoining the tract. The park acquired some time since by the fair district has a long history of such use.

It was set aside for county fairs and horse racing in 1883 and the following year began a long annual series of fairs, horse shows, racing, exhibits, farm products and live stock.

The first five county fairs of the new series begun when provision was made by the legislators for these events were held in the Veterans Memorial Buliding and adjacent grounds.

Surveys are soon to be made for the use of architects in planning a long range construction project for providing the necessary buildings.

TAX DODGING UNCLE SAM

This is the time when Uncle Sam's nephews, figuring the income taxes they must pungle up, get the feeling that the old boy is watching their feverish calculations with a chill eye, set to crack down on the citizen who may gyp the government by error or by fudging a little.

Curious it is to reflect that Uncle Sam himself is the most brazen tax dodger of all. He exacts the last nickel due him from the earnings of private citizens —wages, salaries, professional fees and the profits of big and little businesss. Yet he operates businesses of his own in state after state, and claims immunity from any tax responsibility to the people of those states from the profits of his enterprises.

Consider Uncle Sam's way of doing business in a typical California community, Shasta County. Like all counties, this one provides a host of public services out of tax receipts—schools, hospitals, roads, police protection and so on. A private concern, the Pacific Gas and Electric Co., the chief supporter of these services, this year will contribute $517,000 in county, city and franchise taxes. Uncle Sam's big business there, the Shasta Dam project would contribute an even greater sum. $750,000 if it were assessed and taxed on the same basis. But it isn't. Uncle Sam ducks out from under the taxes even though his Shasta Dam project employes use the roads and schools and enjoy the benefits of police protection and everything else the county has to offer and local taxpayers pay for.

A very plain reason why the perspiring citizen's tax bills are so enormous is that the tax base is being narrowed constantly by new tax exempt government operations. In many California counties, Uncle Sam is the biggest property owner in the district—and the county's most expensive star-boarder. —Contributed.

THE GI BILL OF WRONGS

For thousands of American veterans disillusion has killed fond post war dreams. While many have reenlisted in the armed forces through choice, talks with soldiers reveal the bitter truth, shameful to this nation, that some men have reenlisted solely because their country has let them down, because they have been made to feel like strangers.

All too frequently the veteran cannot find a place to live. Seeking a job, he's like as not to find the employer strike-bound, or to be turned away by a closed shop union that isn't taking apprentices. Trying to make up his lost years of education, he finds school doors closed to him, because so many schools are unable to take veterans over the normal enrollment. He can't buy enough civilian clothing to get out of uniform. Most retailers reserve scarce items for veterans. But there aren't enough shirts and shorts and the like to go around and merchandisers, hamstrung by OPA pricing blunders, have little hope of adequate stocks for months to come. The homelss ex-soldier cannot take advantage of loan privileges to build a house, because the building industries mark time before the dual harassment of the strike wave and unpredictable governmental interference. To many a GI, the GI Bill of Rights must seem a mockery.

Gradually the civilian population has become somewhat accustomed to being shoved around. But such things hit the veteran who fought to preserve a different kind of America, smack between the eyes. One encouraging thought in the situation is that millions of GIs in mufti aren't likely to take it lying down. If they can lay down a barrage of ballot as accurately as they laid down barrages of bullets, official Washington may be due for a shock—and this is an election year.—Contributed.

SOUND ADVICE

Mayor Roger Lapham of San Francisco gave the citizens of his city some sage advice when in his annual message to the board of supervisors, he said they should recognize the kinship existing between San Francisco and its neighboring communities and act accordingly.

"San Francisco can no more progress without their aid and assistance than they can prosper without our help" said the mayor. "'E'very citizen should recognize this himself when the opportunity arises to contact residents of other sections.

The mayor himself sets a good example in his frequent contacts with communities of northern and central California, which he occasionally tours. And all San Franciscans will have an exceptional opportunity to heed the mayor's advice this year when for the first time since the war, they can get around the state freely again, visiting their favorite resorts or camping areas.

When city and country thoroughly understand the mayor's maxim and act upon it, their mutual understanding will be complete.—Conttributed.

Forest Chief Sees 2,500,000 Forestry Jobs

Around 2,500,000 new and permanent jobs can be created if the United States carries through an adequate nation wide forestry program Lyle F. Watts chief of the federal forest service told Secretary of Agriculture Clinton P. Anderson in his 1945 annual report released today.

Watts said that at present the nations forests directly or indirectly provide 3,760,000 jobs but that if the productivity of our depleted forests and run down ranges were restored and if other resources of the forests were fully developed the employment figure might be increased by 2,500,000 jobs to a total of 6,250,000 jobs. Such a nation wide program of public and private forest work would keep 350,000 men busy for six years.

The chief forester warned however that we cannot build up forest production so long as destructive cutting practices are prevalent. He advocated a comprehensive forestry program including nation wide regulation of timber cutting and related forest practices as assurance that the nation's forests shall be kept productive, public ownership of millions of acres which private owners find unprofitable to hold or on which watershed recreation or other public interests outweight the interest of a single owned and increased government assistance to private forest owners.

Breakdown of the 350,000 man forest work program shows that if work of the kind carried on before the war by the CCC were resumed 163,000 new jobs could be set up in the woods without delay. Confined largely to the publicly owned federal, state and community forests though including some protection work on private land this part of the over all program would cost $2,215,000,000 over the 6 year period.

The vastness and variety of forest services and benefits was mirrored in the scope of the work needing to be done on publicly owned forest land. Said the report, it would involve building a network of forest highways, providing access to undeveloped areas through the construction of forest roads and trails, expansion of facilities for fire protection, tree planting, thinning, the pruning and improvement work in young timber stands, range improvement, upstream work to reduce the floods, recreational improvements and other types of work.

But the volume of essential public forest work could be greatly expanded if land now largely useless and idle were purchased from private owners and restored to full production by reforestation and improvement. Here declared the report 30,000 men could be employed for six years at a cost of $500,000,000. An even larger back log of useful work was seen in the job of rehabilitating rundown privately owned forests and of planting thousands of miles of shelter belts on the great treeless plains west of the Mississippi. Such private work according t the chief forester would employ 150,000 men for 6 years and cost $2,350,000,000.

The types of permanent employment that would be increased for the future by the six year work plan consists principally of jobs in the woods such as cutting and hauling timber, caring for new forests, manning the lookout towers, maintaining roads, trails or recreational facilities or herding cattle on the range. Also work in the processing of raw forest and range material such as jobs in sawmills, chemical works, pulp and paper mills, box and furniture factories and other wood using industries in the transportation and distribution of forest and range products and in serving hunters, fishermen and other outdoor rereation seekers.

The estimate that lumber needed for domestic consumption in the next ten years will average 33 billion board feet annually an amount equal to war time demand is coupled in the report with the statement that war time timber cutting and losses by fire insects and disease were 50 per cent greater than annual timber growth. Forest depletion today is so serious that positive action to increase growth is imperative if future employment in forest industries is not to be jeopardized by lack of raw material.

The report noted that while marketing of cattle during 1944 was at an all time high there were 1,228,000 more cattle in the western states in 1945 than in 1934 when the drought necessitated federal buying of more than 7,000,000 head to cut starvation losses and avoid the ruin of thousands of producers. On the basis of these facts stockmen were warned to look more closely at their individual range and livestock situations in order to make sure that there is a proper balance between forage, feed supplies and livestock numbers.

Wood requirements for pulp and paper are expected to remain at levels far above pre war production with anticipated demand for domestic pulpwood at 14.5 million cords annually. Since it is doubtful if imports of paper, pulp and pulpwood which before the war accounted for more than half of the paper consumption in the United States—will ever again exceed pre war levels this means another enlarged wood requirement that must be met by Americas shrinking forests.

Shift Noted In Livestock Industry

War trends, rationing, ceiling prices and subsidies have changed the relative position of various kinds of livestock, according to Vard Shepard, extension specialist in livestock of the Agricultural Extension Service.

Shortages of feed, labor and equipment have forced producers to observe efficient methods of production. High market value of livestock has resulted in better care and feeding. In spite of these great handicaps a record tonnage of meat has been produced during the last four years. This has been accomplished with the lease amount of harvested feed, less labor and equipment and the least financial risk.

To balance livestock numbers with available feed supply there has been a shifting of various kinds of livestock to the kinds showing the greatest incentive for profit. When ceiling prices on livestock in relation to feed costs are out of line pro du-cers shift production to secure greatest income.

Beef cattle numbers increased somewhat from early 1940 to 1944. The culling of older poor quality and low producing cows and the heavy marketing of veal calves has had a tendency to level off or reduce total numbers in 1945. Better management and feeding have tended to speed up the marketing of cattle and still produce more total pounds of meat.

Swine production on farms has been drastically curtailed since 1943 because of a relatively unfavorable feed hog ratio. Garbage feeders have maintained and in some cases increased production because more army and navy camp garbage has been available.

Sheep production has declined 4 to 6 per cent each year due to the shortage of labor decreased acreage of range and high supplemental feed costs. But in most cases where liquidation has taken place producers have shifted to other lviestock production.

Here's how General Electric's increased production and efficiency have affected G-E workers. Average hourly earnings for men, not including overtime pay, have gone up as follows:

Overtime pay gave G-E workers more on top of this. G.E. has made jobs for nearly three times as many. 61,781 worked for G.E. nine years ago.

In 1945 an average of 145,000 had jobs at G.E. and at much higher pay.

G.E. has an obligation to a second group of people—the public. The public wants improved products at fair prices.

"More goods for more people at less cost"—G.E.'s goal—is not a part-time assignment. It is a job for management and worker alike if G.E. is to keep growing, keep raising wages, keep making more jobs for more workers.

A few figures show typical price decreases:

G. E. during the war earned 4.7¢ on each dollar of sales. Of this, 4.1¢ was paid to its more than 200,000 stockholders and the remaining six-tenths of a cent on each dollar was retained in the business to assist in carrying on and expanding its operations.

All money earned over this 4.7¢ was turned back to the U. S. Government. G-E cost-saving methods had made war goods for less money than the Government expected.

These dividends have been declared per share of common stock since 1936:

GENERAL ELECTRIC'S OBJECTIVE has been to keep prices moving downward, keep wages going up, and to earn a fair profit. This calls for volume production, more efficient work and methods. With the help of every single employee, General Electric believes it can show our country, as it did in wartime, an example of American enterprise at its best.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY GEORGE S. BENSON

President—Harding College Searcy, Arkansas

Shelter

Mussolini is dead, Hitler is still missing and Hirohito is taking orders from an American soldier, but mortal craving for power appears to have survived World War II. Any individual who can find something that a great many people need, and figure out a way to keep them from getting it, has put himself in a "key position" able to make a lot of people suffer.

One thing people need acutely right now is shelter. Shortages of building materials and the scarcity of skilled workmen have combined to make housing about the rarest commodity in common use. It is an every-day necessity, too. People have to have a place to live and they will pay whatever it costs to get in out of the weather, or they will take whatever shelter they can afford.

Humming and Hawing

Comes now proposed legislation to protect home buyers and home builders from inflation, by governmental controls. Administration of rulings always brings delay, and more delay. Now we need housing, and more housing. Natural, competitive safeguards will provide better protection against inflation than rulings, as certainly as sturdy walls will keep out more cold than red tape.

The strategy is to fix ceiling prices on residential property, new and old, to allocate building materials and regulate the transfer of new real estate. Allocating materials means giving somebody a right to say who can build and who can't. A crafty "co-ordinator" with such authority could soon have a great many fellow citizens doing his bidding. America needs a V-B Day on bureaus.

Guessing at Prices

Ceiling prices on old residential property is an absurd idea. There is nobody in my state able to umpire the transfer of old homes in my town, much less yours. Such laws are only made to break. A legal ceiling on new-home prices might be easy to express in a mathematical curve but its results would be bad. It would tend to cheapen construction and encourage jerry-building.

Clamping down on the sale of vacant lots would surely be wrong in point of expedience. It would kill much precious time. Service men are coming home now, not after next year. They want places to live, no later than they can get wife and baby out of the in-laws' spare room. They are entitled to a home and ought to have it as fast as their local builder can meet their needs.

The first asphalt beds in the United States were discovered in 1854 at McKittrick.
